Abstract: This article proposes a systematic and accessible description of the ways in which the units belonging to the syntactic level of contemporary Romanian language are structured. The central concept is that of syntactic relation, and the cognitive itinerary starts from the definition of the structural notion of relation, in order to understand the fundamental types of internal relations of the sentence. The typology of syntactic relations allows the construction of an integrative perspective on syntactic functions, by capturing the concrete manifestation of each relation and by detecting the specialized linguistic means of achieving a certain type of syntactic relation.

Keywords: syntactic relation, dependence, nondependence, interdependence, double dependence, complex dependence, unilateral dependence, coordination, apposition, parantheticals.
